

Dear Bob,

I was introduced to the Master's Program because I mentioned to a former Master's graduate that I had plans of transition but I did not know what was on the horizon. I was introduced to the program and it has changed my perspective on many aspects of my life.

Shortly after I embarked on the Master's Program, I became my own boss as I left my career as a public accountant and started a career in Real Estate. I have continued to cling to the idea of creating leverage and margin in my life and while I am in the initial stages of this process, I recently just hired my first full time assistant and have triggered what I hope to be a series of events to focus on my 20%.

What is so life-changing about the Master's Program is that it does not focus on one area of my life but touches every facet. Specifically, my relationship with my children and my wife has grown leaps and bounds and I attribute at least a portion of that success to the program. Getting on the same page with my wife regarding our dreams, our future, our passions, our greater calling as a couple and having those inspiring conversations has been relationship altering. We still intend to complete a Dream Weekend.

One of the areas closest to my heart (and I believe close to the heart of all men) is the area of finances. What I learned about the way God motivates us--by means of fear, love, and rewards--really changed my focus on money. Although it is a continual battle, focusing on the law of rewards has implications on how I look at money and goals, how I spend money, how I save, and how I contribute to the kingdom.

The most significant area of the course is the way that my focus on my kingdom calling has changed especially the way I look at ministry opportunities. The example of the investment banker sweeping the floors of the church sticks out in my mind. I have developed a desire to work with couples in struggling marriages.

Finally, having a focused meeting with men of the same ilk and seeing the lives of other marketplace kingdom builders changed has inspired me. Spending time with these leaders with Christ-centered focuses has challenged me and the way that I live my life.

Sincerely,

Jordan Bennett
