

Retiring the Idea of Retirement

Having spent 25 years selling real estate for Kiawah Island, South Carolina, Brad Munday assumed that his retirement was close at hand. But after graduating from The Master's Program five years ago, his ideas of retirement had been abandoned in favor of a new plan. His career shifted into "secondary focus" behind his Christian life and giving. This prioritizing meant making the decision to continue on in his current marketplace role. Brad realized that his Kingdom Calling was to merge his professional and Kingdom realms...he resolved to push back his "planned retirement" in favor of working as hard as ever in order to be aggressive about giving.

Selling for the Kingdom

As soon as this calling became clear, he felt confident that "every sale was a sale for Christ." This innovative approach to stewardship has allowed Brad and his wife, Ann, to give generously to their local church, local outreach programs, and global missions programs. He has also been able to scholarship others through The Master's Program.

In addition to increased giving, Brad has significantly ramped up his involvement in his local church. His passion to see his church grow into a vibrant community of believers translated into becoming an active member of the Vestry. He spent three years as the head of their Stewardship committee, bringing in speakers to ignite the passion in their members to become stewards for the Kingdom. As a result, the church has seen a substantial growth in giving. He now heads the Master Planning committee, looking to the future of the church.

In the years since The Master's Program, Brad's calling has grown to include a desire to increase his discretionary time in order to "continue to work hard with his church and still be able to give significantly" to the Kingdom. Through his focus on stewardship, he has grown passionate about actively serving his local church.

Working through the principles found in The Master's Program, Brad was able to "find what [he] was wired for in order to forward the cause of Christ" vigorously. He's using his strengths in sales to influence eternity. As a result of sending his treasures ahead, he will enter the Kingdom someday to realize the significance of extending his time in the marketplace. Until then, this Revolutionary is continuing to work hard, give enthusiastically, and look forward to his next role in advancing the cause of the Kingdom!

Brad and his wife, Ann, reside in Charleston, South Carolina. They are actively engaged in their home church, the Church of Our Savior, off of Kiawah Island.
